

Open Access

RC&T now supports Open Access publishing! Authors of manuscripts accepted by the journal may choose between traditional journal publishing and Open Access. In the Traditional model, once your article is published it will be accessible in-print or online to paid subscribers, libraries, or pay-per-view viewers only. In the new model you may choose to publish Open Access, making your article freely accessible to anyone via the journal website. Upon acceptance of your manuscript you (or your funding agency) would pay our Open Access fee at which time we will publish your article with no restrictions on online access. Anyone may view, read, link to, and share the article. We hope this will help authors reach a larger audience and foster more collaboration. In addition, this will meet the requirements of many researchers who receive public funding for their work and who must make their work publicly available.

Open Access is completely optional and entirely separate from our editorial process. Open Access is only offered after a manuscript has been accepted for publication. Nothing else changes: Open Access articles continue to appear in the print journal and online versions of each issue. Our journal is still distributed to hundreds of libraries, companies and subscribers around the world. Open Access articles will be easily identified in the online version by a special “unlocked” symbol.
